The 100+ testimonies that students shared about how the public health crisis has affected their work have been removed from this public version of the letter. If you have questions, feel free to email annabelle.hutchinson@yale.edu*

Yale Faculty and PhD students: you can show support by signing the google doc and offering your testimony here. You should be able to access this doc with your yale email address.

Dear Dean Cooley,

Yale and more than 60 other universities have extended the tenure clocks for tenure track faculty by one year. This is a wonderful idea. Many research projects have been put on hold due to COVID-19, and this has affected concerns for publication, promotion, and progression in one's academic career. By granting junior faculty an extension on their tenure clock, Yale has acknowledged the full severity of the effects that the current public health crisis has had and will continue to have on all forms of academic research.

Yale should extend this policy to PhD students. The current public health crisis has affected the research of PhD students in the same ways that it has affected the research of faculty members. Guaranteed funding and tenure in our PhD programs for a full additional year (including summer, fall, and spring) will give PhD students the time and the resources we need to do the research we came to Yale to do. A full additional year of guaranteed funding that is equal to the baseline funding that all PhD students received this year is necessary for a multitude of reasons as indicated in the testimony of students below, but it is especially necessary given the yearly hiring cycles in academia. Just as this tenure clock extension has been granted to all junior faculty, so should this additional year of guaranteed funding be extended to all matriculated PhD students. This is an opportunity for Yale to lead other universities in demonstrating its support for its PhD students in this time of unprecedented disruption to the normal operations of academia and the world.

PhD students in every department and program have been affected by the current public health crisis. We cannot access our labs, have been forced to halt all fieldwork, cannot access secure data, and cannot access archives and important texts. Many of us must take care of dependents, and many of us are likely to become sick ourselves. Faculty who are taking on additional childcare tasks are less able to offer us advising during this time. In addition, the cancellation of hundreds of conferences and colloquia has extensively curtailed opportunities for PhD students to present research, get feedback, and establish ourselves as scholars in our respective fields. Lastly, many universities have already begun to publicly announce that they will have 'hiring freezes' for the upcoming year. As the global economy heads towards a recession, students near the job market must confront a profoundly challenging hiring landscape.

PhD students from across Yale are united in their support for a year-long extension of funding. In the past four days, over 500 PhD students, representing dozens of departments and degree-granting programs—nearly 20% of the current PhD students at Yale—have signed in support of this initiative. Over a hundred PhD students have offered testimony detailing the myriad effects of the current public health crisis on their ability to continue research and progress towards the completion of their degree.
